By N. STRONG, late Professor of Mathematicks, and Natural Philosophy in Yale College.

OH! see how soon the unwearied sun
 His circling race again has run!
 So time is ever on the flight,
 Nor tires by day; nor sleeps by night.

THE OLD MAID.

BEHOLD Statira's yellow, wrinkled face,
 And meagre phiz, bereft of every grace;
 She finds no pleasure but in envy now,
 Who sits enthron'd upon her sullen brow.
 To range the house, to scold and fret and foam,
 The greatest pleasure she enjoys at home;

FEBRUARY hath 28 days. 1790.

Whene'er she gads (of all her sex the shame,)
 'Tis but to murder some unspotted fame.
 She views each lad and lass with canker'd eyes,
 The first's a fop—the last's a flirt she cries;
 Whene'er a little charming prattler plays,
 Around a matron who her charge surveys.

With tender heart and feels a mother's joys :
 Statira snarls, "how can you bear the noise
 Of brats around you, truly, I should fear,
 They'd stun me so, I never more should hear.
 I might have had e'en twenty years ago,
 My pick of Sweethearts, ev'ry handsome beau ;

APRIL hath 30 Days. 1790.

Would kneel before me, praise my pretty face,
 And swear no other e'er possess'd such grace :
 Applaud my eyes, that did with diamonds vie,
 My lilly skin and cheeks of rosy dye.
 To sprightly wit, I once had some pretence,
 And one and all allow'd me solid sense ;

The only wish that fills her anxious breast,
 Is for some swain with whom she might be blest ;
 Should one apply, she'd seize the offer'd bliss,
 Nor wait two askings, but at once say yes.
 Ye fair be wise, and act your part by times,
 While beauty's sun in his full lustre shines ;

AUGUST hath 31 Days. 1790.

He soon will set, his steeds do swiftly run,
 Nor shall your charms e'er see to-morrow's sun.
 No more the rose upon its stock remains,
 When piercing cold binds rivers with its chains;
 Nor does the charming lilly more appear,
 When winter rules in turn the varying year.

The vernal sun, the rose and lilly brings,
 But youth once gone, no more in beauty springs;
 Each coming year will swiftly pass away,
 Like April snows before the solar ray,
 And would you give whate'er you hold most dear,
 You ne'er can stop them in their fleet career.

OCTOBER hath 31 Days. 1790.

Thus when you are with honest ardor press'd,
 By some fond youth to make him ever blest'd ;
 If after search you should with pleasure find,
 That honor reigns unrivall'd in his mind :
 That he from all, but venial faults is free,
 And ever constant, doats on none but thee ;

NOVEMBER hath 30 days. 1790.

Yield him your heart, and take the name of wife,
 You'll find it gives the highest zeik to life.
 First nature's God saw from his awful throne,
 It was not good that man should be alone ;
 From Adam's breast, the nearest to his heart,
 A rib he took to form his counter part ;

JUPITER and MARS will come in conjunction with each other on the 7th of May, and in the evening may be seen apparently to almost touch each other, being then no more than 44 minutes of a Degree distant one from the other, Mars being on the north side of Jupiter; they will then be seen in the south-eastern part of the Hemisphere, but will be in appearance approaching towards each other for several weeks before—and after said 7th of May will constantly recede from each other, Mars being to the eastward of Jupiter.

THE Planet VENUS will be evening Star, until the 18th of March, thence morning Star to the Year's end.

A new TAX proposed.

A Professed scold is at once the most disagreeable and obnoxious being in the world. She not only renders herself completely disagreeable, but casts a general stigma on her sex; and I will venture to say, there are many old bachelors, who would have long since entered into the state of wedlock, had they not been deterred from it by some female relation or acquaintance, whose great talents in this way made them fear they might meet with such a wife whose genius was of the same turn. The maidens and widows of this country have a just plea to petition for the transportation of every professed vixen; or, if this should be thought too severe, they should at least be taxed, to silence them, though probably they might scold the more for it. I know a very ingenious old gentleman, who has never had the courage to engage in matrimony, and gives it as his opinion, that the many bachelors every where to be found, remain so, more thro' the fear of being scolded to death, than from any mercenary cause, or far less for any real disposition to celibacy. He has furnished me with the hints of taxing the race of inuents, having put into my hands the following proportion, which he thinks very reasonable.

Scolding every morning,	13l.	per ann.
Twice a day, - - -	15
Three times, - - -	20
Every other day, - -	5
Once a week if not Sunday,	2	10
Scolding a husband into a consumption, the jaundice, or any other lingering disorder,	}
Scolding herself into hysterics	50	000

This calculation is made for a woman who brings 1000l to her fortune, which, indeed my friend says, is the least portion a vixen should have: so that the penalties should be proportionably augmented to the increase of this fortune.

ANTI-VIXEN.

THE LITIGIOUS LABOURER.

TWO labouring men, Tom and Joe, going home late one evening, Tom happened to stumble over an ax in the highway; taking it up and shewing it to his comrad Joe, it was immediately agreed upon betwixt them to sell it and divide the money; which task Tom undertook to perform, and accordingly next morning sold it for eight and 4d. Joe being informed of it, demanded his half the money. No, says Tom, you are not entitled to half, as it was I that found it.—True, says Joe, you found it, but was I not in your company, and did you not agree to give me one half it sold for? And if you don't give me my half, I am determined to go to law to get it. To law, says Tom,—that's a pretty way of proceeding; we had better bestow the money on the magistrate and his constable at once, than go that way to work. No matter, says Joe, I am determined upon it; and accordingly away he posts to 'Squire Nine Pence, a trading Justice of Peace in the neighbourhood, who grants a summons for Tom to appear at five days notice. Tom, being alarmed at the summons goes immediately to 'Squire Nine Pence, and tells him, in order to convince your Worship I mean nothing but honesty, I'll leave the proceeds of the axe in your Worship's hands until the matter is determined: So leaving the money with him, he went home. Time at length coming round when the parties were to ap-appear, Joe, as plaintiff, plead that Tom withheld his part of the money the axe sold for. Have you any proof of your being entitled to half says Nine Pence. Yes, says Joe, there is my neighbour Listen, and my neighbour Tattle, both heard him say I was entitled to half. So says Nine Pence, they must be "subpœnaed." Have you no more evidences? No please your Worship, says Joe. Then call Mr. Sharke, the trading constable, and tell him serve these "subpœnas." Hold, your Worship, says Tom, who knew well the fleecing qualities of 'Squires and their attendants, perhaps we can make up the matter ourselves. I think, says Nine Pence, you had better, as you are neighbours; which was accordingly agreed to by the parties at variance. Well, gentlemen, I am glad to see you reconciled, says Nine Pence, and will deliver your money lodged with me; but stay, I must first deduct the charges. Let me see, there is for Summons, subpœnas serving, &c.

Here gentlemen take the ballance and divide it yourselves, and so good bye to you.

Well, says Tom, friend Joe, what think you of his Worship's ingenuity; are not things as I told you? You see the happy effects of going to law. His Worship contrived to keep all but four pence; if it had been forty shillings, it would have been the same; he and his friend Sharke would have divided the whole. What do I think! sa's Joe, why I think he knows his trade well, and can fleece the poor very ingeniously; few else come before him. That he does, says Tom—few know it better than I do. Two of his neighbours, a few days ago, fell out about a dog. The matter was decided before him; and what with subpœnating evidences, swearing them, &c. his Worship made a forty shilling job of it, sued the poor man for the charges, and the dog in question was not worth one shilling.
